Present Standing.

A Tie Game at Holyoke.

Last Saturday the Nationals met the Holyokes of Massachusetts at the home of the latter and played what was expected to be the closing game of the season between these two clubs, but which resulted in a tie that will have to be played off, if necessary to settle the status of the two clubs in the championship contest. A fine chance was offered the Nationals to whitewash their opponents throughout the nine innings, but was not accepted. In the first, by errors, they gave the Holyokes five runs; then by an excellent up-hill fight they overtook and passed them in the sixth inning.

Here again they had victory in their hands, but by a repetition of miss-plays in the ninth inning they threw away their chances and passed them are not compared to the company. Milton Slemmer is at the head of the scene-paluting department, and Morgan Shorwood looks after the "properties." To day the Nationals meet the Albany team, and there is much speculation as to the result. If they would bat as well as they did on Saturday and cut out the errors it would be no trouble to tell how the game would end, but with the Albany club they cannot afford to be as generous as they were with the Holyokes, and present them with five runs at the start. Although the orcheatra seats are the highest priced, the dress-circle bids fair to become the fashionable part of the house. Owing to the wedge-shape of the lot upon which the Opera House is built, the stage being placed at the widest end, there is not a seat in the house from which a fair view of the stage cannot be obtained. From the vestibule on the main floor wide stairways, with handsome and substantial balustrades, mount on either side to the dress circle. Don't interrupt me and I won't you." All this was done in a familiar and collequial way; the parties were more or less known to each other and judges and jurors were greatly influenced by knowledge of general character. I remarked that regularity the merits of the easy were so clearly brought out that, when it was committed to the jury, there was no question about the verdict, and so astisfactory has this system proved, that though an appeal lies to the Queen in council, as W. Still, it stands as a anomaly in the history of English jurisprudence, for I believe that in every other place where the principles of the common law govern, the learning of the bench and the ingenuity of the bar are considered necessary to elicit the truth.

Mr. Roach has surrendered all his property to the officers, and the amount of the loss above that is stated to be very small.

and have been told by old bunters that it has grown there ever since white men knew anything of the country. I have often found it filteen or twenty miles from any farm, and probably twice as far from any place on which it was or ever had been cultivated; as at the time of my observations-1861 to 1875-it was cultivated by very few Arkansas farmers. The specimens I saw had a scattered habit of growth, generally one or two stalks, and never more than a dozen in a bunch, if one might call them bunches, and I never saw a patch or bed of it a yard square. The only differences led of it a yard square. The only differences I could detect between it and the cultivated clover consisted: First, in this scattering habit of growth; second, in the rather diminished size and elongated shape of the foliage and flowers—both of which were less abundant than on the cultivated plant; and third, the greater length and flowersity of the stalk. greater length and flexerosity of the stalk. have frequently taken stalks by the flower heads, which did not seem to be more than eighteen inches high, and on stretching them place of large commercial transactions. Contracts are daily made and broken, or misunderstood, which require the intervention of some proper tribunal to interfere and compel their fulfillment. And there was no absence of litigation. The calendar was large, and the court-room crowded. The first cause called and identical with that sent by Inspector and identical with that sent by Inspector. and identical with that seut by Inspector Hammond to the Commissioner of Agriculture.
